Essay

1. Explain how composers in the later nineteenth century reconciled audiences' increasing reverence for familiar musical forms and expressive idioms of the past with the demand for innovation and novelty. Who were the most important composers of the period, and how did their compositions address these paradoxical expectations? What techniques and strategies allowed composers to evoke the past while creating novel modes of expression? Identify and describe examples of works from the second half of the nineteenth century that illustrate your points.

- d. After the Ball
- e. From My Life

- d. George Chadwick
- e. Horatio Parker

- 2. What did the categories of program and absolute music mean in the second half of the nineteenth century? What were the origins of these categories, and who were their important exponents? Identify works from the later nineteenth century that represent these categories, and explain similarities and differences in the ways that musical form, content, and processes in these works serve programmatic or absolute musical expressive goals.
- 3. What role did nationalism play during the second half of the nineteenth century in the formation of musical styles among composers in Europe, Russia, Britain and the United States? How did the role of nationalism differ in different regions? Did nationalism yield a single coherent musical style or a diversity of styles? Identify and describe compositions that illustrate the influence of nationalism on later-nineteenth-century music, and explain whether and how nationalist ideologies and aesthetics confer distinct stylistic traits on these works.
- 4. How and why did the categories of art music and popular music begin to diverge in the late nineteenth century? What repertoires demonstrate this divergence? What role did American musicians play in the emergence of popular musical genres? Discuss works from these new popular genres that illustrate their characteristics and functions.
